

THE FACE

Food for thought: 'I've become my own paparazzi,' says art student

What was the 1338th thing you ate in the past year? Can't recall? Ellie Harrison, a fine art graduate from Nottingham Trent University, can – hers was a crêpe paysanne from Café Rouge in Oxford. But Harrison's no spooky memory-mistress, just a rigorous documenter of diet – she's recorded and photographed every single thing she's eaten since her 22nd birthday on March 11 2001, via her website. Part art project, part diary, part web curio, Eat22 is the latest development of Harrison's ongoing fixation with food. 'I do love the stuff,' she confesses, 'so this is essentially a research project, documenting a year of my life through my very favourite thing.' Eat22 will continue to map Harrison's mastication until March 11 this year, pausing to ponder such questions as: Why did she eat her dad's prize tomatoes? Why did she think of her stomach during a Stop The War march? And why – dear God, why? – did she consider staying at the Alton Towers Hotel? Such self-scrutiny merely pre-empts current art trends, says Harrison. 'All the Young British Artists have become celebrities and so I've become my own paparazzi.' Robin Bresnark www.ellieharrison.com/eat22.htm

Patheticrip-off.com

Back in the days of the internet goldrush there was a ridiculous scramble for 'easily remembered' web addresses. Smart alec opportunists bought up the rights to desirable URLs, aiming to make a fast buck. Now, two years into the new millennium and the honeymoon's over: unsold domain names are piling up like so much virtual flotsam. These ten are real names, as are the asking prices. Roll up! EW

Top Ten unsold domain names

parboiledrice.co.uk	£4,000	wallsandceilings.co.uk	£2,500
babyloncars.com	£25,000	a.noyed.com	£1,000
thecustardshop.co.uk	£10,000	macbackpackers.co.uk	£10,000 yarnmanufacturersandsuppliers.org ...	£2,000	theirmajestiesthekingandqueen.co.ukOffers accepted filledoatcakes.co.uk	£10,000
origamigeezers.com	£3,500		