Factory fodder

Mike Winterbottom's new movie of the rise and fall of Factory records is out next week. There's the usual film website promoting 24 Hour Party People (or Fac 433) and much of Factory culture. It's nothing special apart from some very lively message boards. Sadly, there is an almost total lack of music. If you want to know about Factory in more detail, head for Cerys Matic's unofficial history: it is much better. www.partypeoplemovie.com www.cerysmatic.clara.net/Factory/

Sutton Hoo

Sutton Hoo in Suffolk is probably the grandest Saxon burial site in the UK. A new visitors' centre opened there last week, which makes it more accessible to the public. It comes with an informative website that offers interactive maps, archaeological details and material for teachers. www.suttonhoo.org

Eat me!

Ellie Harrison is a 24-year-old fine art graduate from Nottingham Trent University. For the past two years she has been photographing everything she has eaten and documenting it on her website. Harrison now lives by a strict code of rules that means she can't eat without photographing it first. You can view each meal, read her log, and marvel at her obsession. www.ellieharrison.com/frontpage.htm
